by Nova Clark, copyright 2017

Opening narration:

Dr. Harvey Wallace, scientist. A desperate man, and for good reason—because in a society where natural resources are bartered and bet on like currency, Dr. Wallace has no patience left. In 2050, his world is one in which forests and jungles are harvested each time someone wants to buy a shiny new car or diamond necklace. And what Dr. Wallace is beginning to suspect is that his fellow citizens are leading him right up to the doorstep... of The Twilight Zone.

Closing narration:

Case of a warning that fell on deaf ears: that mankind must learn to balance its luxuries with the Earth they came from—or face the consequences. Proof positive that the best things in life were, are, and always will be free. A lesson to be learned in, and not too far outside... of The Twilight Zone.
