

“The 4th Wall”

by Rich Rees, copyright 2017

Opening narration:

Awkward encounter involving Stanley Metta, for lack of established etiquette when a member of the dinner party suddenly believes his life is a fiction and the world around him is make believe. What’s worse: he can’t seem to shake the feeling he is being watched. Which raises other questions – watched by whom? And why? These have answers but Stanley will only find them in the Twilight Zone.

Closing narration:

Stanley was warned but would not be denied the awful truth he suspected all along. He found a crack in the fourth wall and looked the camera in the eye. He’s taking the news of his fictional existence as well as can be expected, but instead of reading his lines, he wants to narrate the episode. How do I know? Because my name is Stanley Metta and my address is one of the more self-reflective avenues of the Twilight Zone.
