

“In a Heartbeat”

Copyright 2018 by Brian Skalak

Opening narration:

What is time but simply a metronome constructed by man? Ticking away towards who knows what or who knows when. But for one man, this constant reminder of his immortality will soon become obsolete and the beating of his own heart will be as empty and meaningless as the flapping of a butterfly's wings... in The Twilight Zone.

Opening narration:

This just goes to show that God nor beast nor man nor machine can decide our future, for it is already sewn into the infinite thread of the cosmos. What lies at the end of this existence we call reality is only an illusion kept under lock and key in a dusty filing cabinet in the forgotten back storage room... of The Twilight Zone.